

Position: Visiting Professor – International Relations Graduate Program, Federal University of Bahia, Brazil (PPGRI-UFBA, Brazil)

Description: The Graduate Program on International Relations of the Federal University of Bahia, Brazil (PPGRI-UFBA), seeks to find competitive candidates for a Visiting Professor opportunity in our university. The call is for one year, and it is renewable for up to one more year for Brazilian candidates, and up to three more years for foreign candidates. Activities begin in June 01st, 2021. We are particularly interested in candidates who would widen and deepen our strengths in one or more of the following research fields: Global Governance and International Politics; International Development Cooperation; Theorization from Peripheral or Global South Places; and Critical Theories of International Relations and/or of Globalization.

The successful candidate(s) are expected to teach, in Portuguese or in Spanish, up to two graduate courses per semester; to supervise graduate research projects; to collaborate with the ongoing research projects of the Faculty; and to contribute to the building of international research networks involving Faculty members. Interest in Brazilian Studies and/or African Studies is an asset, although not required. Salaries are competitive.

Senior visiting professors with high scientific production, professional and supervision experience will have priority, aiming an effective contribution towards the Program's scientific production, human resources development and cooperation network, within and outside UFBA, thus allowing for joint proposals that may result in scientific-academic production.

Please note that this is part of a general call of the University and more information can be found in the links below:
